

TWENTY-SECOND UNITED STATES COLORED REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was organized at Camp William Penn, during the month of January, 1864, with the following field officers: Joseph B. Kiddoo, Colonel; Nathan P. Goff, Jr., Lieutenant Colonel; John B. Cook, Major. The majority of the field and line officers had previously served in other regiments, Colonel Kiddoo having been promoted from Sergeant of the Sixty-third Pennsylvania to Lieutenant Colonel, and Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh, and subsequently appointed Major of the Sixth Colored, whence he was selected to lead this regiment. Towards the close of the month, it was ordered to the front, and proceeded to join the Army of the James, under command of General Butler. It went into camp near Yorktown, where it was drilled and disciplined, until the opening of the spring campaign, when it was assigned for duty to the Third Brigade, First Division of the Eighteenth Corps. It was first posted at Wilson's Wharf, on the north side of the James River, where it was put to constructing an earth-work for the protection of the supply transports on their way up the river. This duty accomplished, it was sent to the south side of the river, in the neighborhood of Fort Powhattan, where it was again employed in constructing works, and preparing for the crossing of the Army of the Potomac, on its arrival from the Wilderness campaign. The enemy's cavalry from Richmond attacked at this point, but after a spirited engagement, was handsomely repulsed.

On the 15th of June, General Baldy Smith, who had returned from his march to Cold Harbor, where he had gone for the reinforcement of Grant, led his corps to the attack of the rebel intrenchments before Petersburg. The Twenty-second headed the charge in this assault, and captured six of the seven guns taken by the division, and two of the four forts. The victory was gained, however, at a fearful cost to the regiment. Its loss was one officer, Lieutenant Emery Fisher, and seventeen men killed, and five officers and one hundred and thirty-eight men wounded, and one missing. Lieutenant Colonel Goff was among the severely wounded. Its conduct on this occasion was warmly commended at corps and army headquarters. In the assault upon the enemy's strong works at Chapin's Farm, on the 29th of September, it delivered a most daring and impetuous charge; but was repulsed, suffering a loss of eleven men killed, two officers and two men wounded, and eight missing. Major Cook, who led the regiment, was among the severely wounded.

On the 27th of October, Grant inaugurated a general movement along his entire lines, reaching out on his left to Hatcher's Run and Armstrong's Mill, while upon the right, General Butler demonstrated in force, and the Eighteenth Corps moved upon the Richmond defenses on the Charles City and Williamsburg roads. The Twenty-second led the column on the latter, and at a point near the old Fair Oaks Battle-ground, charged on the rebel entrenched position with great steadiness and courage, but was again repulsed with heavy slaughter. Colonel Kiddoo, who led in the charge, was severely wounded, and Captain William B. Clark was killed. The entire loss in killed and wounded, exceeded one hundred. After this action, all three of its field officers were in hospital at Fortress Monroe together, for wounds received in separate engagements. Upon the fall of Richmond on the 3d of April, 1865, this regiment was among the first of General Weitzel's troops to enter the city, and rendered important service in extinguishing the flames which were then raging. On account of its excellent discipline and good soldierly qualities, it was selected by General Weitzel to proceed to Washington, after the assassination of the President, to participate in the obsequies of his funeral, and was afterwards sent into Eastern Maryland, along the lower Potomac, to assist in the capture of Booth and his co-conspirators.

In May, the regiment re-joined the corps, and with it proceeded by sea to Texas, where it was assigned to duty upon the Rio Grande. It returned to Philadelphia in October, where, on the 16th, it was mustered out of service.
